

WAR FILMS
REGARDED AS CERTAIN
Attorney General Brown Meets
With Moving-Picture
Men of City
DESIGNATE TIME LIMIT

Attorney General Brown met with several moving picture men this afternoon to decide what action to take in prohibiting the further showing of the films, "Civilization" and "War Brides". The censors say the films discourage recruiting. That they will be stopped is certain; at least "War Brides" and "Civilization". The only question to be decided was when to stop them.

Bookings for these two films run about two to three weeks ahead, and have been advertised. The State officials may permit these contracts to be carried out and then prohibit any further bookings or they may stop the films immediately.

The moving picture men declare themselves perfectly willing to abide by whatever decision is made. This was stated this morning by the Selznick people, who control "War Brides," and the Peerless Film Exchange, which has the release of "Civilization."

Nearly all theatrical people are unanimous in the opinion that there is no reason for moving against the "Patria" film. The feeling was expressed by one prominent Philadelphia moving picture man, who said that there was plenty of reason for the State's stand against "War Brides" and "Civilization," because both these films laid stress on the horrors of war and thus served to discourage men who might have an impulse to enlist; but "Patria," he said, only emphasized the intrigue of war and was more fascinating than discouraging.

"Patria" is a fifteen-week serial and has almost concluded its run.

Managers of theatres where these films are being shown this week, say that they are only waiting a final decision from the attorney general and that whatever he advises they will do.

The managers say there is no use in giving their individual opinions because they all want to act together, and will act exactly as the State officials advise.

STANLEY THEATRE ASKS
PATRONS TO BE PATRIOTIC

Patrons of the Stanley Theatre have been reminded how patriotic this special notice, which adorns the theatre program.

Tickets are sold with the express understanding that the purchasers' behavior toward the President of these United States, the flag and the military forces sworn to uphold the Constitution, be respectful at all times.

This course of conduct, together with that of rising and standing at attention when the orchestra renders the "Star Spangled Banner," is not only the duty of every patriot, but it should be the pleasure of every one to show such honor to this great crisis.

Abel L. Einstein, of the Stanley Company, today said he did not expect that any one in the Stanley audiences would refuse to rise at the playing of any national air, but if it should happen, he said, the person would be politely escorted to the box office and given back his price of admission and thereafter refused the privilege of the theatre.

Mr. Einstein also said the Stanley company is co-operating with the Women's Division of the Home Defense League in having printed song sheets and flags for use in the audiences.

MOVIE SHOWS ROMANCE OF WONDROUS NEW PAINT

This Product Stains, Varnishes and Gives Hand-Rubbed Finish at One Operation

"The Romance of Paint," or the "Painted Romance," might be a good title for the clever movie which is being shown for the first time today in the Ledger Central window, Broad and Chestnut streets.

The film shows how furniture is painted with a new kind of paint, Velvo-Tone, which stains, varnishes and gives a rich hand-rubbed finish, all with the stroke of the brush. This is the first time such a thing has ever been attempted by any paint company.

It remains for a Philadelphia concern, John Lucas & Co., Inc., to manufacture a paint which will do all these things.

The picture is to go all over the country under the direction of the advertising manager of the Lucas company, W. M. Zintl, and his assistant, Roy C. Sheeler.

The movie which is being shown today for the first time at Ledger Central deals with the romance of a young cashier, Miss Alice Drayton, at a factory, who is attacked by ruffians just as she is bringing in the weekly payroll, rescued by a wealthy young man, Herbert Sinclair (both of the Eastern Motion Picture Company.)

Alice is ashamed to have him call on her because her home is so shabby. The evening she goes home dependent on account of the scratched, shabby furniture, she sees the advertisement for Velvo-Tone in her newspaper, decides to give it a trial and purchases a quart of the paint.

The home is transformed. Herbert calls Alice and Herbert love, plight their troth and decide to start a home of their own—leaving the sentiment with the audience. "Velvo-Tone will make your home more beautiful."

Resinol Soap

GARDENING

Dear Little People—Isn't it just grand to have the warm spring days here so that we may work in the garden?

I am the FARMER and you are my little gardeners—did you ever think of that? This is the time when we must all keep busy. I want those of you who are working in your gardens to write and tell me how things are going.

LOOK OUT FOR WEEDS

It is very easy to destroy a few weeds at a time, but when they get the start of you, then you may get discouraged and give up your good work. Tell me what you are raising and WHY you are raising certain things. This will show me whether you are using FORESIGHT or not.

Another thing—PLEASE put your tools back where you got them.

It is a good plan to let your tiny fingers play with the dirt and, if you can, take off your shoes and let your pink toes get acquainted with the dirt. I WISH EVERY BOY AND GIRL COULD GO BARE-FOOTED THIS SUMMER.

Always, your loving Editor,
P. S.—Is your rake TEETHING?

STRANGE ADVENTURES OF BILLY BUMPUS

THE BEAVERS

By Farmer Smith

"Can't you see them?"

"I don't see a thing," answered Billy Bumpus, turning and looking at Mrs. Beaver, who was standing on the bank of the pond.

When it was decided that the Beavers were to help in the war preparations, Billy hastened over to see Mister Beaver and his good wife. He did not know very much about his neighbors near the water front, and he was anxious to see just what the Beavers could do in helping the Woodland people get ready to defend their homes against the attack of the airship, should it really come.

Billy turned around on the very small island and looked once more down a hole which you could not see from the shore. At the bottom of this hole was the Beaver home, where, fast asleep, lay the three little children, the largest of whom was Buster Beaver.

"Say!" shouted Billy Bumpus. "We have no time to waste. If you are to help us, it is time for you to be doing something."

"I want you to see my wonderful home. If you want us to dig your dugouts, you must see how well we build our homes and then you can tell everybody that we are going to build the dugouts when war comes."

"Swish!"

Billy turned around so fast on the little island that he almost fell into the water. It was Buster Beaver who had left the home and dived into the water and come up just back of Billy.

"Grand—glorious!" shouted Billy Bumpus. "What a submarine he will make!"

"Oh!" exclaimed Mrs. Beaver from the shore. "You want us to build the dugouts and be submarines, too?"

"I want to get off this island," replied Billy. "By this time Buster Beaver had reached the shore and scampered up to where his mother was. Billy took one good look at the icy water and then plunged in and swam to where Mrs. Beaver and Buster were. "I don't like cold water," was his only comment.

"I don't know of anything you do like, except tin cans," laughed Mrs. Beaver.

"But, say," began Billy, "what on earth have you down in that hole over on that nice little island?"

three children and I live there and we are glad to get out in the nice air of spring. I tell you. We start in the fall and build our home way out there so that the wolves and foxes can't get us."

"I see," answered Billy, "but where is your front door?"

"Underneath the water, of course," replied Mrs. Beaver. "You see, Mister Beaver and I cut down the trees—"

"The—the—WHAT?" Billy was astonished.

"I'm surprised! Didn't you know that Beavers gnaw and gnaw at a tree until it comes down?"

"But you can help us when the war comes," said Billy.

"War is nothing to us, for we are at war all the time, trying to keep the wolves and foxes from getting us. Every time we cut down a tree we have to scamper back as fast as we can so that some one will not catch us and eat us. All it's a fight, I guess."

"Indeed, it is," began Billy. "But what do you eat there in your home?"

"I thought that was coming! You are thinking about eating all the time," said Mrs. Beaver. At that moment there was a noise behind them, and when Billy turned to look Mrs. Beaver bit his tail a tiny bit and made him jump. With that she and Buster jumped into the water and were gone.

Turning again, Billy saw Mister Fox—then HE turned, and, oh, how he did run!
